1 December 1913.
College Again!

My Mommy,

This time for my daily epistles again, isn't it? It is so nice to go home often, for, no matter what one says, it is easier to write if one sort of keeps in touch with what is happening, by seeing everything oneself.

This morning when I left, it felt like "the cold, gray dawn", all right. It didn't get entirely light until I reached Springfield. It seemed queer to be out so early. I reached Worcester just as people were going to work, and it seemed as if I <sup>had</sup> been up almost a whole day.

Betty was ~~so~~ good to me,- she gave me cake and candy and nuts and
apples to bring back, besides fixing over some clothes for me. I wish I could let her know some way, some how, how I appreciated it all.

Everyone asks about you, Mummy dear, you are such a lovely Mummy that everyone loves you and most of all your baby
